Article 14

Gender equality

(Last updated: 31/08/2024)

Introduction

The advancement of gender equality is today a major goal in the member States of the Council of Europe (Konstantin Markin v. Russia [GC], 2012, § 127 and Jurčić v. Croatia, 2021, § 65). The principle of gender equality finds its primary foundation in Article 14 of the Convention, through the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of sex.

State obligations (to protect) in brief

Difference in treatment constituting discrimination:

- Generally speaking, very weighty reasons have to be put forward before a difference in treatment on grounds of sex can be regarded as compatible with the Convention (Abdulaziz, Cabales and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 1985, § 78; Burghartz v. Switzerland, 1994, § 27; Schuler-Zgraggen v. Switzerland, 1993, § 67; Konstantin Markin v. Russia [GC], 2012, § 127; J.D. and A. v. the United Kingdom, 2019, § 89; Napotnik v. Romania, 2020, § 75; Jurčić v. Croatia, 2021, § 65).
- Difference in treatment on grounds of pregnancy will amount to direct discrimination on grounds of sex, if not justified (Napotnik v. Romania, 2020, § 77; Jurčić v. Croatia, 2021, § 69).
- The Court has applied the “manifestly without reasonable foundation” test only in the context of Article 14 in conjunction with Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to circumstances where an alleged difference in treatment resulted from a transitional measure designed to correct a historic inequality (Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], 2006, §§ 61-66; Runkee and White v. the United Kingdom, 2007, §§ 40-41; and British Gurkha Welfare Society and Others v. the United Kingdom, 2016, § 81).
- References to traditions, general assumptions, prevailing social attitudes or financial interests in a particular country are insufficient justification for a difference in treatment on grounds of sex (Konstantin Markin v. Russia [GC], 2012, § 127; Ünal Tekeli v. Turkey, 2004, § 63; Jurčić v. Croatia, 2021, §§ 73 and 84; León Madrid v. Spain, 2021, § 66; Beeler v. Switzerland [GC], 2022, § 110; Nurcan Bayraktar v. Türkiye, 2023, § 74).
- The stereotypical understanding of families as necessarily having two legal parents cannot be considered to amount to sufficient justification for a difference in treatment (Yocheva and Ganeva v. Bulgaria, 2021, § 116).

Positive action:

- In certain circumstances a failure to attempt to correct inequality through different treatment may in itself give rise to a breach of Article 14 (Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], 2006, § 51).
- As a result, a difference in treatment between men and women is acceptable if it is a form of positive measure aimed at correcting factual inequalities between the two genders (Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], 2006, § 61; Andrle v. the Czech Republic, 2011, § 60).
- Measures aiming at correcting the disadvantaged position of women in society can continue to be reasonably and objectively justified on this ground until such time as social and economic changes remove the need for special treatment for women (Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], 2006, § 66; Andrle v. the Czech Republic, 2011, § 60).

Positive obligations in cases of domestic violence:

- Domestic violence is a form of gender-based violence, which is in turn a form of discrimination against women (Opuz v. Turkey, 2009, §§ 184-191; Halime Kılıç v. Turkey, 2016, § 113; M.G. v. Turkey, 2016, § 115).
- The State's failure to protect women against domestic violence may breach their right to equal protection by law even if this failure is unintentional (Talpis v. Italy, 2017, § 141; Opuz v. Turkey, 2009, § 191; Eremia v. the Republic of Moldova, 2013, § 85; T.M. and C.M. v. the Republic of Moldova, 2014, § 57).
- The failure to adopt legislation to combat domestic violence has led the Court to find a breach of Article 14 of the Convention (Volodina v. Russia, 2019, and the key theme on domestic violence).
