Article 14

Prisoners and discrimination

(Last updated: 28/02/2023)

Introduction

Discrimination in the context of imprisonment has come before the Court in two different ways. On the one hand, the Court has examined cases of alleged discrimination on the ground of being a prisoner as an aspect of a personal status, including cases of alleged discrimination between different types of persons deprived of liberty. On the other hand, it has scrutinised a number of cases in an imprisonment-related context raising issues of discrimination on different grounds.

Prisoner status as grounds for discrimination

- Being a prisoner is an aspect of personal status and amounts to “other status” for the purposes of Article 14 (Stummer v. Austria [GC], 2011, § 90; P.C. v. Ireland, 2022, § 80 and other references cited therein);
- Being a detainee in a remand prison also falls within the concept of “other status” under Article 14 of the Convention (Chaldeyev v. Russia, 2019, § 72);
- From the perspective of the right to respect for private and family life, detainees are in an analogous position to convicted prisoners (Laduna v. Slovakia, 2011, § 58; Varnas v. Lithuania, 2013, § 114; Chaldeyev v. Russia, 2019, § 75). Whereas, in the context of old-age pension payments, convicted prisoners are not considered to be in an analogous or relevantly similar position to remand prisoners (P.C. v. Ireland, 2022, §§ 87-92; see also §§ 81-86 for the comparison between the situation of a convicted prisoner and that of a person detained for the treatment of a mental illness).

Noteworthy examples

- Stummer v. Austria [GC], 2011: Refusal to take work performed in prison into account in the calculation of pension rights;
- Clift v. the United Kingdom, 2010: Differences in procedural requirements for early release depending on the length of the sentence; and
- Difference in treatment of remand prisoners compared to convicted prisoners as regards visiting rights (Laduna v. Slovakia, 2011; Chaldeyev v. Russia, 2019; Vool and Toomik v. Estonia, 2022) and as regards conjugal visits (Varnas v. Lithuania, 2013);
- P.C. v. Ireland, 2022: Disqualification of convicted prisoner from old-age pension payments while incarcerated.

Discrimination in prison-related context

- Khamtokhu and Aksenchik v. Russia [GC], 2017: Exemption of female offenders from life imprisonment;

¹ Prepared by the Registry. It does not bind the Court.

- Petrov v. Bulgaria, 2008: Prisoner’s inability to make telephone calls to his partner because they were not married;
- Rangelov v. Germany, 2012: Refusal of social therapy or relaxation of conditions of preventive detention due to the applicant’s foreign nationality;
- X v. Turkey, 2012: Total isolation of homosexual prisoner for more than eight months, allegedly to protect him from fellow prisoners;
- Martzaklis and Others v. Greece, 2015: Poor physical and sanitary conditions of HIV-positive prisoners without adequate treatment in the prison psychiatric wing;
- Alexandru Enache v. Romania, 2017: Deferral of prison sentence for mothers, but not fathers, of young children;
- Aleksandr Aleksandrov v. Russia, 2018: Refusal to impose a non-custodial sentence as a result of the applicant’s place of residence;
- Ēcis v. Latvia, 2019: Blanket ban on prison leave for male prisoners in closed prisons;
- Dikaïou and Others v. Greece, 2020: Placement of HIV/AIDS suffering prisoners in a collective cell within the prison wing also housing ordinary prisoners.
