Article 34/35

The locus standi of relatives (indirect victims) to bring a case to the Court when the direct victim has died

(Last updated: 28/02/2025)

Introduction

In this type of situation, the Court must examine whether relatives can be considered to be “indirect victims” of the alleged violation of the Convention suffered by the deceased “direct victim”, in default of which the application will be declared inadmissible as being incompatible ratione personae with the provisions of the Convention.

Principles drawn from the current case-law

- Where the alleged violations of the Convention are closely linked to a death or disappearance in circumstances allegedly engaging the responsibility of the State, the Court has recognised the standing of the victim’s next-of-kin to submit an application (Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], 2009, § 112; Lambert and Others v. France [GC], 2015, § 115, for an alleged potential violation of Article 2). In such cases, the Court has accepted that close family members can themselves claim to be “indirect victims” of the alleged violation of Articles 2, 3 or 5 (see noteworthy examples below). Whether they were legal heirs of the deceased and whether closer relatives have submitted an application is not relevant.
- In cases where the alleged violation of the Convention was not closely linked to the death or disappearance of the direct victim, the Court’s approach has been more restrictive. The Court has considered that certain Convention rights are eminently personal and belong to the category of “non-transferable” rights (Articles 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, Article 3 of Protocol No. 1). For this line of case-law, see Sanles Sanles v. Spain (dec.), 2000.
- However, the Court has made, throughout its case-law, exceptions to this general approach and granted victim status to relatives who complained about violations unrelated to the death or disappearance of the direct victim. As regards complaints of ill-treatment of deceased relatives under Article 3 of the Convention, without losing sight of the strictly personal nature of the Article 3 rights, the Court has recognised the locus standi of applicants who complained of treatment concerning their late relative in the absence of a causal link between the alleged treatment and the death of the relative, in circumstances where such applicants show either a strong moral interest, besides the mere pecuniary interest in the outcome of the domestic proceedings, or other compelling reasons, such as an important general interest which requires that their case be examined (Karpulyenko v. Ukraine, 2016, §§ 106-114; see a contrario Kaburov v. Bulgaria (dec.), 2012, §§ 54-59).

- In other cases concerning complaints under Articles 5, 6 or 8, the Court has granted victim status to close relatives, allowing them to submit an application where they have shown a moral interest in having the late victim exonerated of any finding of guilt (Grădinar v. Moldova, 2008, §§ 90-103; Akbay and Others v. Germany, 2020, §§ 80-82) or in protecting their own reputation and that of their family (Polanco Torres and Movilla Polanco v. Spain, 2010, §§ 31-33), or where they have shown a material interest on the basis of the direct effect on their pecuniary rights (Grădinar v. Moldova, 2008, § 97; Micallef v. Malta [GC], 2009, §§ 48-49; Stoimenovikj and Miloshevikj v. North Macedonia, 2021, § 25). The existence of an issue of general interest pertaining to respect for human rights which necessitated proceeding with the consideration of the complaints has also been taken into consideration (see Marie-Louise Luyen and Other v. France, 2005, § 29; Ressegatti v. Switzerland, 2006, § 26; Micallef v. Malta [GC], 2009, §§ 46 and 50; see also Biç and Others v. Turkey, 2006, §§ 22-23; Akbay and Others v. Germany, 2020, §§ 86-89).
- The applicant's participation in the domestic proceedings has been found to be only one of several relevant criteria (Micallef v. Malta [GC], 2009, §§ 48-49; Polanco Torres and Movilla Polanco v. Spain, 2010, § 31; see also Kaburov v. Bulgaria (dec.), 2012, §§ 57-58 and Fabris and Parziale v. Italy, 2020, §§ 39-40).
- A potential compensation claim under Article 41 of the Convention cannot be considered as constituting a material interest which would allow an applicant to bring the application on his/her own behalf. In this respect, the necessary direct effect on an applicant's pecuniary rights by the impugned measure must concern pecuniary rights existing at the national level (Akbay and Others v. Germany, 2020, § 85, in respect of an Article 6 complaint of entrapment).
- When applying these different and non-cumulative criteria, the Court has not always referred to whether the right involved was transferable or non-transferable (see, for instance, Micallef v. Malta [GC], 2009, §§ 44-51).
- Even if the respondent State does not raise any objection as to the Court's jurisdiction ratione personae, the Court may consider, of its own motion, that this issue calls for examination (see Karpulyenko v. Ukraine, 2016, § 102). This is a matter which goes to the Court's jurisdiction ratione personae (Jakovljević v. Serbia (dec.), 2020, § 29; Vilela and Others v. Portugal, 2021, §§ 57-60).
